Stand in the Trench, Achilles 1915. By Patrick Shaw Stewart.

I saw a man this morning. Who did not wish to die: I ask and cannot answer, If otherwise wish I. Fair broke the day this morning. Against the Dardanelles; The breeze blew soft, the morn's cheeks.

The poem closes with a prayer to Achilles: let him appear, 'flame-capped, and shout for me'. It seems as if Achilles' presence in the trench can protect the speaker. Here the poem alludes to Iliad 18.202ff.: here, Achilles has decided to rejoin battle after Patroclus' death, but because he lacks armour cannot fight. Athene kindles a supernatural fire from his head and he steps to the parapet 'by the ditch' of the Greek camp (the analogy with a trench is easy) and makes a battle ...

The allusion is to Homer's Iliad 18.203–9 in which a grief-stricken Achilles stands in the Greek trench, revealing his dazzling form to the Trojans. For Shaw-Stewart, the dream of having Achilles on his side materialised at Gallipoli. But having survived the campaign, Shaw-Stewart lost his heroic phantom, dying in France on 30 December 1917.
